Representing History - Film Education

Winston Churchill's history of the British people, for example, will differ from Simon Schama's. As with other art forms, film should not be seen as showing the whole truth or what really happened. In fact, films that claim to be 'based on a true story' should perhaps be approached with more suspicion than any fictionalised narrative!

Rewriting Literary History

obtain, no matter how worthy the project. For example, Caryl Churchill's publishers refused to allow Top Girls to be included in The Norton Anthology of Women's Literature (which, incidentally, also slights the drama, most bizarrely in choosing Susan Glaspell's short story "A Jury of Her Peers" over the play on which it is based, Trifles)
