He craves to be a little Caesar-a vest size pocket edition of one of the dictators He wants people to come to him, to take orders from him, to do his will vainly trying to quench their burning desires They are like the tendrils of a grapevine; reaching out, trying to find something round which they may entwine themselves and be at rest

Qohelet and Camus: Answering the Absurd

Man desires lucidity and cohesion, life and answers, yet is met with a seemingly indifferent, silent and cruel universe As man craves peace and order, he looks to a world that does not afford such crucial human longings Likewise, there was a thinker who preceded Camus by three millennia who shook his fist at the sky and arrived upon similar
